GREATEST KEPT SECRET OF

Prologue

Greatest Kept Secret of All Time

History's never-before-spoken words are: all people — everyone — can become rich, including the poor. It all unfolds for you on a personal level in Part One.

Every rich and successful person since the beginning of time used the Self-Leader Secret. The Self-Leader Secret will enable you to achieve ANY goal, ANY dream. Part One that follows reveals the Self-Leader Secret in a step-by-step beginner's course: the Neothink® Self-Leader System specifically prepared into a system to multiply the ordinary person's income — your income. That is what 99% of the people ask for, so that is how I introduce you to Neothink® and the Self-Leader Secret. You have your one life here, so grab it with Neothink® and make it the wealthy life you were meant to live!

History's greatest kept secret — the Self-Leader Secret — is used by the wealthiest people alive, by the wealthiest people who ever lived, by the leaders of the world, by the most powerful men and women in the world, by both the ruling class and non-ruling class leaders — by Presidents, by money/power giants, by legends. Our founding fathers used it too.

Very, very few people ever learn this secret revealed in Part One. Most people live and die in a mediocre, suppressed life and never know the Self-Leader Secret, which is why so few ever experience wealth. You have certainly felt that omnipresent "something wrong" with life; you just never knew what exactly was wrong. You have unknowingly lived a suppressed life; you never knew the ruling-class leaders held from you a secret — the Self-Leader Secret — that opens a successful and fulfilling, happy life.

The Neothink® Self-Leader System that follows will make the non-ruling class wealthy, healthy, and safe one person at a time. The Self-Leader System is imperative to save your future. The Neothink® Society and my Secret Meetings will continue teaching you, developing you, nurturing you with the Self-Leader Secret.

The Neothink® Society contains highly-guarded information that I now bring to the innocent suppressed class, beginning here in Part One. Read on to learn this forbidden information. Herein lies the secret to ever-so-elusive prosperity and happiness.

Prepare to become an unstoppable Self-Leader! That RIGHT to become prosperous has been taken away from you, hidden from you, kept secret from you by your rule-of-man leaders all your life! You have every RIGHT to know the Self-Leader Secret. All your life your rule-of-man leaders have suppressed you and your loved ones. But not so any longer...not once you read Part One, The Self-Leader.

The Self-Leader

I stopped in my tracks at work. Like a bad dream, I realized the leaders have wealth and prestige and that I would never have much. Even worse, I realized that my routine-rut job was structured to serve the leaders, from the leaders of the company I worked for to the leaders of the land who got a chunk of whatever I earned. “I make just enough to get by, with maybe a little left over for spending,” I said out loud. “I’m on the wrong road, heading toward the wrong future. I work hard; I’ve worked all my life, but my hard work is making the leaders rich!”

I stopped to think: The rich and powerful leaders did not work their whole lives to make someone else happy. But I did. I, along with the majority of people, worked my whole life to make the leaders happy.

At that moment, I became flush with determination to somehow wake up from this bad dream into a better world with a better life. Out of nowhere, a voice spoke to me: “The secret to getting rich is to become The Self-Leader!”

A New Concept: Integrated Knowledge

I drove home from work that fateful day wondering, Who is the self-leader? All I could figure was that the self-leader captured for himself the rewards and wealth from his efforts in life. “I must set off on a journey to discover in myself the self-leader,” I said. “But where do I begin my journey?”

Deeply troubled, I felt I had no power in life. “Knowledge is power,” a very wise man once said. So I decided to start my journey seeking knowledge at my place of work.

The next day I began to seriously study my place of work for the first time. I observed other people doing their jobs and even asked them questions. Immediately I noticed the more I started to learn about the business, the more power I felt.

So, I became the pupil, and my place of work was the school. As I educated myself about the business, I acquired more and more integrated knowledge. After just one week, I could feel that this process of building integrated knowledge would inevitably deliver more and more power, promotions, and pride.

Also, I started having fun. I rediscovered that education was fun! I always felt that my school days were the happiest days of my life. In fact, I now realized that when my education ended, a sad stagnation began. I realized that man was meant to use his powerful brain to learn. Man is happiest when he is learning, I thought, unhappy when not learning. So I decided to keep on learning — right on into the working world. That learning process was my ticket to success and happiness. Only this time, good money instead of good report cards was my reward.

The Trap

Without first identifying my stagnation trap, then success would have been forever impossible, the hardest thing in the world for me to attain. What was the trap that caused my financial and emotional stress? That trap was the opposite of my ticket to wealth and happiness — the opposite of integrated knowledge. That trap was unintegrated knowledge in the form of specialized tasks. You see, the opposite of integration is specialization. Doing the same set routine of specialized tasks every day caused me a lifelong rut of stagnation.

Our leaders put me in my seemingly inescapable stagnation trap. Yet wealth and happiness now seemed attainable with another way of thinking that had never been introduced to me. That other way of thinking was: integrated thinking.

With integrated thinking, I was no longer trapped by specialized tasks in an inescapable routine rut. Although very natural, my mind had been conditioned not to work that way. My mind, as everyone else, had always been trapped in a small sphere of specialized thinking...just following a very limited routine of specialized tasks that my leaders laid out for me. Now, with integrated thinking, I began to lead myself.

Rise from the Trap

Integrated knowledge came from my self-education process at work. The more I learned about different aspects of the business, the more free I felt from my specialization-trap. My learning process, I realized, was a function of curiosity. My specialization-trap, put on me by my leaders, had killed that curiosity. But I remembered when I was a child. I remembered my never-ending curiosity. That curiosity was a natural part of man, and I felt it coming back. My job became exciting and fun again as I learned more and more about the business!

The business I worked for, as boring as it seemed before, now took on a life of its own. My curiosity and excitement grew, soon motivated by a promotion. “This is how I was meant to live,” I said out loud one day while driving to work. “These have become the best days of my life!”

Step One

Project Curiosity

(Inside Secret)

As I gained more integrated knowledge about the business, I seized opportunities that I could never foresee while stuck in my specialized rut. To build my integrated knowledge, I developed a program at work called Project Curiosity. I simply expressed to my peers and superiors an interest in what they were doing. I asked questions. I explained to them that I wanted to learn more about the business and that their jobs were very important parts to the business. Most felt flattered and spent as much time with me as I needed. They also felt proud of their work, and I reflected to them what good workers they were. That not only was the right thing to do, but the mutual respect that I established began to build my leadership role toward the future.

As I gained integrated knowledge, I gained more and more power and control over the business. That was pleasantly unavoidable. Responsibility began to flow in my direction. People began to come to me for answers — for leadership. “Don’t be bashful,” I told myself. “Use your integrated knowledge and give them guidance. Take control.”

I realized I had been taught not to take control, just to do as I was trained. “Our leaders do not want us to gain integrated knowledge and take control,” I told my friends. I knew that I had never acquired integrated knowledge before simply because I was never introduced to the concept. I was never shown how, and I never saw anyone else going after integrated knowledge. But acquiring integrated knowledge and taking control was actually very natural...and fun. It sure beat my boring routine rut. Indeed, acquiring integrated knowledge was rooted in my nature — rooted in wonder and in the curiosity to learn...a very strong and natural desire during childhood that was lost in adulthood as I became specialized.

I now loved Project Curiosity; I resurrected my nearly-forgotten child of the past within. For the first time as an adult, I would go to work “to play”.

The Self-Leader Secret

Breaking Free (Inside Secret)

For years, I had been caught in one routine rut with the same specialized tasks every day, year after year. My specialization-trap cut me off from discovering my own creativity, which cut me off from wealth and happiness.

Man is equipped with the greatest mind in the animal kingdom, and he is capable of this powerful thing called integration. Integration is the opposite of specialization. Through integration, man enters the new and wonderful world of creation. I stepped one foot into that wonderful new world as I began creating better ways of doing things at work. I felt exhilarated!

Around this time, I read a book about Milton Hershey. I realized that integration was behind Milton Hershey's phenomenal success. It got me thinking; take the simplest money-making unit, I thought, the one-man, one-cart candy vendor selling his homemade candy creations. Say that candyman quit his job as an educated accountant to become this entrepreneur. He would face a challenge, for he would be too specialized. He must be good at everything needed to succeed, not just accounting. He must develop and make the candy; he must service his equipment and fix it when it breaks down; he must advertise perhaps through non-conservative yelling; he must be streetwise to handle troublemakers; he must clean his cart to keep his candy appetizing; he must do his own crude research and development to outcompete his street-smart competition; he must figure out the best times and places to sell; he must organize and order supplies to smoothly meet inventories; he must purchase raw food supplies and must time perishable inventory properly; he must purchase needed equipment. He must stay competitive. Perhaps he gets creative and invests in an artist who paints an appetizing design on his cart. Or maybe he gets really clever and installs fans that blow a sweet chocolate aroma in the faces of passersby. He must do everything. He must be sure that his intake is greater than his output of money. He must keep track of inventories, supplies, monies, even marketing data. He must become aggressive. He must figure out the best places to sell. Although his competition may not like his aggressiveness, that is all part of marketing. "Where do I stand at 5 o'clock? In Times Square or in Greenwich Village?” He has to figure out all these different things. He cannot remain specialized and survive. He cannot just be an expert accountant. He cannot just be an expert service mechanic. He cannot just be an expert marketer or just an expert candymaker. No matter how delicious his candy creations, he will not sell his candy with a dirty, broken-down cart. On the other hand, no matter how good his janitorial and mechanical skills, he will not sell a thing with awful-tasting candies. No matter how expert his marketing techniques, he will not sell for long if he runs out of candies. No matter how expert his accounting, he will not survive unless he integrates everything needed for success.

I realized that from that entrepreneurial atom emerged the understanding, the indisputable core of anyone producing money and power — from a candy vendor on the streets of New York to the presidents of corporate America fifty stories above. That indisputable core is: integration.

I stood up and began pacing back and forth in my home talking out loud, like a professor talking to his class: “To grow, become more successful, and put more values into society — thus, build more wealth and happiness for oneself — requires integration, not specialization. Specialization just puts us in stagnation-traps. We all know this because of our specialized routine-ruts. Our value creation is limited to our specialized tasks. We can’t grow; we can’t bring more values to society, thus more wealth, pride and happiness to ourselves and our families. We handle the same specialized job every day, day after day. And since we can’t put more values and more of our own creativity into our specialized jobs — into society — then we stagnate. We will not experience growing wealth and happiness during our lifetimes, not this way.”

I stopped pacing. I sat down and sank into deep thought: What is the path to growing wealth and happiness? I believe, for the first time in my life, I know the answer. The path to growing wealth and happiness is: creating greater and greater values for society. If we are specialized and cannot put more values into society, then we have no growing wealth and happiness. We have no growing power, period. If not growing, then we are slowly dying. Indeed, without growing wealth and happiness, then stress and stagnation creeps in. Our enthusiasm for life, love, and happiness tires, fades, and then dies as we grow older.

I stood up and started pacing and “lecturing” again. My mind, for the first time in many years, was on fire. “Imagine a street vendor who is specialized as opposed to integrated because he works for a distribution company and does only what he is told,” I said. My hands were moving around as I talked. “Everything is prepared for him: he is told when and where to stand every day. He loyally stands at his corner from 11:00 am to 7:30 p.m., every day. He does that for ten years, twenty years. He still stands there every day, as an old man. He never became integrated, thus his unique creativity never flowed. He was robbed of an exciting life!

“Now, contrast that poor man to Milton Hershey: Milton Hershey started off working in a candy factory, and later he pushed a candy cart in the streets. But Hershey learned integrated thinking. He began integrating all the aspects of value production. Through integration — integrating everything needed for success from the secret ingredient of his chocolate to the growing distribution system of his candy — he rose to breathtaking success and wealth. Most importantly, he felt the growing happiness of bringing more and more values to society. He brought the greatest value to society: that is, he provided jobs — thousands of jobs! ...We must put an end to our stagnation traps!”

Why Our Leaders Specialize Our Workplace (Inside Secret)

Why do our leaders make our jobs specialized traps? I went to see my father who was a former Senior Research Scientist for Du Pont.

I explained everything to him. My father smiled knowingly as I said, “Dad, first consider the integrated thinker, say that success-bound Milton Hershey type. He figures out what it takes to be successful. And he relies on no one. He is tough and independent. He digs for integrated knowledge and begins to build his way out of his rut towards success. He does that — digs for success — on his own. And no matter what company that integrated thinker works for, no one can stop him. That’s right, he who gains integrated knowledge will easily integrate all aspects of success. He is going to rise to the top of that company. He will soon begin nipping at the heels of the people in upper management, and he will eventually take over their jobs."

My dad smiled at my vigorous pursuit and said, "I know all about that from my days at Du Pont."

"Now, let me ask you, Dad, couldn't leaders of big businesses today, without explicitly realizing what they're doing, over the decades shape their companies' jobs into specialized traps to discourage integrated thinking? Couldn't they shape their companies' jobs into specialized traps to stop integrated thinking and suppress competition from within so they can remain on top unchallenged?"

My Dad raised his eyebrows and nodded.

"They protect their livelihoods," I continued. Now, I was on a roll. "The integrating Milton Hershey type is independent, does not really need a boss or supervisor, and is destined to take control of the company...whereas the specialized worker is a quiet slave always dependent on his leaders, on those above him. Instead, imagine independent integrated thinkers rising throughout today's companies. No way. Today's business leaders discourage integrated thinking to stop competition from within. ...They're like a hoax." I stopped to think for a moment. "The white-collar hoax," I added.

After another pause, I continued, "A hard-driving integrated thinker such as the original founder exerts the energy and effort to keep his company dynamic, competitive, growing, and full of opportunities — through building his company's momentum instead of just riding it. After a few generations, however, those companies become filled with lazy executives. Those companies, with the white-collar hoax sitting on top, slow down and become uncompetitive, bureaucratic, specialized structures.

"When an employee beats the odds, becomes a competitive integrated thinker, he or she or she starts rapidly rising in the company as did Lee Iacocca at Ford under Henry Ford II's leadership — a third-generation grandson. Ford II suppressed and then fired Iacocca. But Iacocca eventually became president of Chrysler, and he became very successful.

“In corporate America, I suspect the executives above you at work subconsciously do not want to encounter an integrated thinker. Those above you, from your boss to the CEO, do not really want you to accumulate integrated knowledge about the business. Today’s executives are very different than the founders and first-generation executives.”

My dad nodded. “I can really relate to everything you’re talking about,” he said. “The president of Du Pont disliked the greatest value at Du Pont — integrated thinkers. Lazy leaders really don’t like workers’ initiatives to acquire integrated knowledge. Management gives those employees resistance. Big-business leaders today are often lazy, insecure people. That’s why they implicitly discourage us from rising up.”

“But the original business leaders are not at all like that,” I said. “I’ll tell you a story about William Durant, the founder of General Motors. Even before cars, he was co-owner of the Durant-Dort Carriage Company. He built the carriages that horses pulled. In 1890, a young man in his twenties named Charles Nash was employed by Durant-Dort Carriage Company and was put in the blacksmith department pounding iron all day long. Not long after he was there, this young man walked through the doors of Durant’s easily accessible office. ‘I’m wasting my time,’ he said. ‘You can get a power hammer there. It would cost about $35.00 and do more pounding in a day than I can do in a month!’ Durant took the young man’s suggestion and then put him on a drill press that prepared cart braces for attachment. A few days later, Durant visited Nash at his new station. Nash’s station looked like none of the others: Nash had rigged it with an overhead spring and a treadle that left both hands free and doubled output. Durant was so impressed, he said, ‘Charlie, we’ll get another man here. Come with me.’ Durant equipped all the stations with a spring and treadle.

“Durant put Nash in another department and another and then another. Nash gained more and more integrated knowledge and rapidly moved his way up. He began integrating all aspects of the business. With Durant’s encouraging and nurturing manner, Nash broke through the specialized rut of just pounding iron all day long. He rose to the top.

Greatest Kept Secret Of All Time

“Nash went on to become, in 1910, the President of Buick; in 1912, the President of General Motors; and then four years later he left General Motors to start Nash Motors Company. I know you remember the Nash Rambler. Nash Motors Company later evolved into American Motors.”

I paused to shake my head. Then I finished, “We won’t have rising Charles Nashes today because everyone is suppressed; everyone is discouraged. The leaders don’t want us to acquire the all-powerful secret to success — integrated knowledge. They only want our routine effort that maintains the business that they ride for all the wealth.”

Beating The Odds (Inside Secret)

I stopped for a breath and realized I was not finished. I continued, “Occasionally someone does beat the odds as did Lee Iacocca. That someone discovers integrated thinking. And occasionally someone leaves his specialization-trap to start his own business. He’s forced to break free from a specialized routine in order to survive. Even that small entrepreneur, say the cart-pushing candyman, can’t remain specialized. He can’t just be a good customer-service man and merely laugh and greet everyone. He has got to do everything. He must acquire a basic level of integrated knowledge to survive.”

“You’re so right,” my father said. “But let me warn you, when you beat the odds and beat the management above you and succeed with integrated thinking, or if you leave to start your own business, then aspiring leaders in government will eventually strike and often destroy your integrated efforts. Every business-advancing integrated thinker including every entrepreneur fears authorities — fears local authorities, fears federal authorities, the IRS, FTC, EPA; fears legal authorities, such as litigious lawyers. Every business-advancing integrated thinker carries that fear. Remember, I ran into FDA authorities when I was soaring ahead on cures to diseases at Du Pont.”

“You know, we all sense the dishonesty and destruction in our government. But can the ordinary person really put together the hoax and expose the frauds? No, we just know that dishonesty goes on in our government, yet we’re too specialized to put together the fraud above us, no less a solution.”

“But those who beat the odds and start rising up with integrated thinking are not too specialized to put together the fraud above us,” my father added, “perhaps even a solution.”

“Yes, yes, I see,” I said. “Most people go to work, do the same set routine, then go back home. They can’t possibly expose the frauds in management and certainly can’t expose the frauds throughout our government. Ordinary people don’t know how business and the economy really work. They’re simply too specialized. They go to their jobs, go back home, and they’re none the wiser. They can’t really see and expose the hoax as long as they have no integrated knowledge.”

“But through integrated thinking,” my father added, “they begin to know how business works, then how the economy really works, then how big government really works against the economy. At that point, they not only see the hoax throughout government, but begin to see and expose the frauds. Without a doubt, integrated knowledge threatens our leaders in government as well as in big business. Therefore, our government pushes down entrepreneurs and all others who rise up through integrated thinking.”

At that moment, I remembered a movie I saw years ago called Tucker, a true story: Back in the ’40s, a lone genius of society, just a working man named Preston Tucker, defied the Establishment and developed the Tucker Torpedo — the car of the future. It was the car America loved. Yet, just before mass production began, political big-business leaders teamed together with regulatory bureaucrats in the SEC and with a dishonest judge from our decadent legal system to destroy Tucker. Those dishonest people, our establishment-leaders, destroyed Preston Tucker, an entrepreneurial genius who rose up from just a working man on the assembly line. He rose through integrated thinking to bring an unprecedented value to society. After our leaders destroyed Tucker, he got very sick and, his life ruined, he gave up and died. ...Yes, Dad was right, I realized.

“Integrated thinking is discouraged by our big companies, by our big government, and by our public educational system, controlled by our government,” I heard my father saying.

“Society is suppressed into a big specialization-trap,” I heard

myself saying. “Integrated thinking is our only way to put more and more values into society — our only way to build our happiness and wealth! Our leaders suppress our only way to happiness and wealth. And they even use fear and intimidation against entrepreneurs and others who rise up with integrated thinking!”

“We feel disillusioned as adults, son. Life and love are not what we once thought they would be. But we have no clue that life is so much less than our youthful expectations and hopes because our leaders are not treating us right!”

Our Leaders Are Wrong To Us! (Inside Secret)

My father stopped talking, for he saw me suddenly drift into my own thoughts. I could not shake off my thoughts about Preston Tucker: Just what did those big-business and government leaders destroy? Yes, they destroyed Preston Tucker. Yes, they destroyed that beautiful Tucker Torpedo that America loved. But they destroyed even more — they destroyed the greatest value one can bring to society: They destroyed the tens of thousands of jobs and new opportunities that Tucker would have brought to the working class.

Now I understood why so many people suffer in silent frustration, and I said, “For decades, human potential has been systematically battered down and destroyed...like Preston Tucker and his car company that would’ve created thousands of jobs. Jobs are being destroyed. Opportunities for us disappear with those lost jobs. Even worse, tender youth and their new businesses that would bring a plethora of new jobs and opportunities to the world cannot rise today in the face of debilitating laws, regulations, litigation, and lawsuits. Recessionary times are politically created conditions! Society’s long-term standard of living is suffering. Why? Integrated thinkers can’t rise. Thus, prosperity for the people sinks. Prosperity is being drained from the people to preserve the livings of lazy leaders!”

My father, a very wise man, seemed astonished at my understanding about the state of things today. My father’s eyes told me how proud he was of me.

The Self-Leader Secret

Good-Bye Wealth and Happiness (Inside Secret)

I thanked my father for his worldly advice. While driving home, I pondered the life I dreamed about in my youth and how I never found that life. I started thinking about another movie I had seen years before, City Slickers starring Billy Crystal. I remembered a scene where the three main characters were sitting together, one had a gun and was contemplating shooting himself because he was caught in a stagnation-trap with no way out. He was crying. I remembered that another character played by Billy Crystal desperately said something like No! Remember when we were kids, and we'd play ball, and the ball would get stuck in a tree? We'd yell, 'Do-over!' and we'd just play it over again. That's all you need to do now — a do-over. Do your life over again. Do a do-over; we'll all do a do-over.

But I now understood why the movie never really answered the problem of their stagnation-traps and their disillusionment of life. The director and the writer of that movie sensed the hopelessness, but did not understand we are all trapped in specialization. They did not know that our leaders put us in these traps. “The problem is bigger than us!” I shouted in my car. “The problem is beyond our control and not our fault. And just before we die, we know we’ve been robbed for all eternity. We just don’t know how or why or by whom. We never find the life we dreamed about in our youth.” ...Now, I was determined to not only make a lot of money, but to have the complete life of my dreams as well.

They Use Us...And Use Us Up! (Inside Secret)

When I returned home, I unlocked my door, walked inside my house, went straight for the phone and quickly punched out a phone number.

“Hello?” answered my brother.

“Eric, it’s me,” I said.

“It’s...it’s after midnight. Is something wrong?”

“I’ll tell you what’s wrong. We’re all stuck. Our taxes keep going up in order to pay for the leaders who drain society. Yet, we don’t even know what’s really happening. Eric, your wealth and happiness is suppressed. Your time on earth, to experience everything you ever will, goes by in a flash. What a tragedy to look back and know you missed out. Your leaders cause you to miss out! You must not let that happen to you and your loved ones! We're all stuck in a big stagnation-trap! But I don't think our lives need to be like that. We can break free!"

Leave the Leaders' System...Discover the Self-Leader System (Inside Secret)

My brother and I talked for forty minutes. After we hung up, I sat at my kitchen table and began writing in my diary: "To free myself from the leaders' system requires a powerful counter-system. I'll call it: The Self-Leader System. The Self-Leader System has begun unfolding before me day by day. I can feel the self-leader growing within me every day, deep in my soul. I have begun building a base of integrated power inside that no establishment-leader can stop. I will not be denied. I will not die unfulfilled, without experiencing wealth, prosperity, and romantic love. I will experience the good life. I will build the Self-Leader System, step by step, until it breaks through the establishment-leaders' money/power monopoly. I will make sure my loved ones and I get the life really worth living. Hereafter, I will enthusiastically educate myself about my place of work. Over the next few weeks, I will acquire the basic knowledge of how everything works."

Things really started to roll.

The Golden World (Inside Secret)

The next day, when I returned home from work, my brother was sitting on my front doorstep waiting for me.

"I want to know more about our phone call last night. I want to learn about The Self-Leader System."

"A Golden World awaits us, Eric," I said, "a world you always wanted but never found. You belong in that world of super happiness and wealth. Remember when we were boys, and we felt life had so much to offer...excitement, wealth and romance? A tremendous hoax hid that world from us. I'm just now uncovering the Self-Leader System that'll take us into that world. As I uncover the Self-Leader System, I'll give you lessons and assignments along with me. I can get you started today; here's your first assignment called Project Curiosity: Start educating yourself on the different aspects of the business at work. As you initiate this process, you must not be afraid to take on opportunity — camouflaged sometimes as unwanted responsibilities. But realize, those seemingly unwanted responsibilities are just part of getting used to change. We're taught to avoid change. But you'll go through a lot of changes as you go through The Self-Leader System and gain more and more integrated knowledge. Those changes will require some getting used to at first. Before long, what seemed unpleasant before will become the most exciting part of your career — change...the opposite of a routine rut. Like me, you'll quickly start having fun. You'll rapidly go through changes as you discover a world of wealth-building actions all around you. At that point, you'll be ready for your next lesson. Here, I'll write down Lesson One:"
